Introduction

A Wastepickers, or Chiffonnier, was a 19th- and early 20th-century term for someone who made a living by rummaging through refuse in the streets to collect material for salvage. Scraps of cloth and paper could be turned into cardboard, broken glass could be melted down and reused, and even dead cats and dogs could be skinned to make clothes. The Wastepickerss did not recycle the materials themselves; they would simply collect whatever they could find and turn it over to a "master Wastepickers" (usually a former Wastepickers) who would, in turn, sell it—generally by weight—to wealthy investors with the means to convert the materials into something more profitable.

The Wastepickers are the one who collects the rags from the street, trains localities and from various other places from where a general public would wish never to go there forget about the picking of something. Anybody in the whole society either men women or children can be a wastepicker. It is not because they like this profession of collecting the garbages and rags from different places but it is just because of their poor condition, which makes harassed for their survival in life. And for their survival they are required to do some work.

The Waste pickers are faces difficult situations day by day and things get worst when the government machinery itself infringes their fundamental as well as human rights. Also various policy and programs made by the Government does not reach to the needy ones and remains at paper itself or get completed on paper.

Taking into account several problems that are faced by the waste pickers and for the effective disposal of waste or garbages, Mr. Bali Charan founded Wastepickers Welfare Foundation in the year 2014.

The National Environment Policy, 2006, which states "Give legal recognition to, and strengthen the informal sector systems of collection and recycling of various materials. In particular enhance their access to institutional finance and relevant technologies"

BAJAJ COMMITTEE REPORT 1995

"Presently the informal sector of rag pickers is contributing substantially to the recovery of recyclable material from urban solid waste. However, rag pickers- mostly women and children-live under and work in extremely unhygienic conditions. It is essential to improve the present system of collecting and utilizing the recyclable material. These rag-pickers could be organized by setting up cooperatives. These workers can then collect recyclable material right at the household level; incidentally, they could also collect at the same time organic waste material from the household and deposit at the roadside collection sites. This will also prevent health hazards and recycling system. This will also prevent health hazards associated with rag picking in garbage dumps and provide them better working

Plastic Waste (Management and Handling) Rules, 2016,

The National Action Plan for Climate Change, 2009, states, "While the informal sector is the backbone of India's highly successful recycling system, unfortunately a number of municipal regulations impede the operation of the recyclers, owing to which they remain at a tiny scale without access to finance or improved recycling technologies" This is part of the Mission on Urban Sustainability.

The Electronic Waste Management Handling Rules 2016,

The CAG Audit on Municipal Solid Waste in India (2016)

also recommends (Chapter 3, Section 3.5) that "MoEF/ states should consider providing legal recognition to rag pickers so that recycling work becomes more organized and also ensure better working conditions for them"
